SPRING 2021

Tuesdays 4:30-7:10 p.m.

This course is organized around memory in the landscape as it relates to black geographies then and now, including slavery, the Civil War, civil rights, and the Tulsa Race Massacre in the United States. As scholars show, memorializations in the landscape shape cultural, economic, and political relations in the present. As such memorializations continue to act upon the social world – an ongoing agency of the cultural landscape.

We will meet face to face three times: first class, midterm class, and final class in Tulsa. All other classes will be held via Zoom during the designated class time (Tuesdays 4:30-7:10 p.m.). Undergraduates and Graduate students welcome!
